When employing a new employee, we must prepare a whole package of necessary documents. Of course, this is primarily about the employment contract. But not only that. You will need GDPR information, information on employment conditions, company regulations, provisions on equal treatment and - if necessary - also information on monitoring or sobriety testing. There are also obligations other than information - e.g. reporting the employee to ZUS, creating appropriate documentation, preliminary examination and initial occupational health and safety training. And if necessary, additional documents may also be useful - such as a form for parents or scope of duties or job description. So how do you not forget about anything important? This webinar not only reminds you of the responsibilities related to employing an employee, but also explains them - with particular emphasis on the most important or most problematic ones.
